619 SOUTH MAIN STREET. KAISER BLOCK

Miss Beatrice Fosburgh, who had jumped out of bed at the same time as her sister May, stopped an instant to turn on the electric light, she saw when the light flashed out her sister already lying dead on the floor and her father and brother engaged in his struggle with the burglar. Miss Beatrice, has been questioned and cross-questioned, again and again upon this point. Under all this, she has not varied her story in the slightest essential particular. She says distinctly that she saw her brother struggling with a man whom she had never seen before.

Miss Sheldon, who is slightly deaf, did not hear the disturbance until it had been in progress for some time and was not quick in getting into the hall. When she reached there the burglar had fled, and the members of the family were gathered around the body of May, which lay on the floor where her brother had placed it when he caught her in his arms as she was falling.

Outside the house evidence of the visit of the burglars was found in the shape of footprints on the ground by the veranda, from which two of them jumped in making their escape. Nearly a mile away from the house a pair of trousers were found that were the property of Robert S. Fosburgh. At a less distance a hat, a shoe and a mask made of a pillow case were found. Young Mr. Fosburgh's 32-caliber revolver, which had been in a bureau drawer of the spare room, was missing and has not been found since. The bullet which killed Miss Fosburgh was of 32-caliber and of the same size and weight as those which filled young Fosburgh's revolver. The mask found at a distance from the house was made from a pillow case that was in the spare room. The Fosburghs say they never saw the hat and the shoe that were found until they were shown to them after the tragedy. Upon all these points the testimony of Mrs. Fosburgh, Jr., confirms that of the other members of the household. The stray shoe that was found does not fit the feet either of Fosburgh, Sr., or of Fosburgh, Jr. It has been traced to a New York shoe store and the date of sale is known, but not the name of the purchaser.

Just what evidence is in the hands of the chief of police and the prosecuting attorney to upset this story of the Fosburgh family is only partially known. It is known, that, among other things, an effort will be made to prove that quarrels in the Fosburgh family, and particularly between young Stewart Fosburgh and his wife, were by no means uncommon.

Another point made by the police is that it is queer that the burglars should wait until they got into the house they intended to attack before they made the pillow-case masks. To this the Fosburghs offer no explanation, merely contenting themselves with the statement of the fact that the mask found was made from a pillow case that was in the spare room. The police also have touched upon the fact that the toes of the tracks found under the veranda point inward, toward the veranda. On the other hand those who accept the Fosburgh family's story of the tragedy argue that if a person lowered himself from the roof of a veranda before jumping he would face inward toward the house and jump backward, and that in such a case the tracks be made on landing necessarily would point in toward the veranda.

OFFICERS

Chosen by Ohio Druggists—Akron Man Elected.

Dayton, O., July 19.—The Ohio State Pharmaceutical Association yesterday elected the following officers: President, J. C. Farman, Findlay; vice president, Charles Freerick, Cincinnati; second vice president, G. C. Himmelman, Akron; secretary, L. S. Kopp, Cleveland; treasurer, J. H. Vonslein, Upper Sandusky. The next meeting will be held either on a boat on Lake Erie or at Put-in-Bay.

GROWING.

The Association Formed In Akron.

Opera House Managers Doing Well.

National Association the Next Step.

Pennsylvania Must First Get Into Line.

Secretary A. G. Henry of the Association of Ohio Opera House Managers, which was organized here in May writes very encouragingly to Manager T. K. Albaugh of the Akron Opera house. He predicts that within a short time every opera house of any consequence in the state will be represented in the association. Already Oil City and Wheeling managers have asked to join the "good work" and have become members.

It will be a sorry day for barnstormers when they strike Ohio hereafter, if the association is able to accomplish all that it has set out to do. And if it succeeds pretty well, Manager Albaugh has a plan in mind to organize a national association. Indiana and Illinois already have associations of the opera house managers. Ohio is now organized and so is New York. If Pennsylvania will come into line by next season nothing more will be necessary to a combination of the state associations.

To effect this is desirable for the reason that, while a company may start out well, it is likely to fall below its original standard if it has hard luck. Cheaper people will be employed and all that. With a national association these facts could be disseminated among theatrical managers very promptly and dates thereupon extensively cancelled.

GREAT MEETING OF VETERANS

Will be G. A. R. Encampment Next Month.

The next national G. A. R. encampment, which is to be held at Cleveland in September, will doubtless be attended by more veterans than have attended an encampment in many years. The short distance from Cleveland to Buffalo and the great extent to which the show will have been advertised by visitors by the time the encampment begins, will cause the veterans to turn out as never before. Rooms and board for many visitors to the encampment have already been secured and those who look forward to attending this meeting of Civil War veterans, will realize that so many of them will never again be assembled, for they grow constantly older and the death list increases faster each year.

MYSTERY OF A MURDER.

The Fosburg Trial Now Under Way at Pittsfield.

The Family Stands Firm In Defense of the Son.

Pittsfield, Mass., July 19.—It is the belief of Pittsfield people that the government has a large task on its hands to prove that Robt. Stewart Fosburgh killed his sister May, in the trial now in progress. They know the story the family tells, and interest in the hidden facts the police promise to reveal is intense.

As told by the family the story of the tragedy is that after a particularly harmonious evening the house was closed and all went to bed some time about midnight. There was a guest staying with them—Miss Bertha Sheldon, of Providence. In her honor they had been having a very merry evening. This statement is confirmed by certain nearby neighbors, who, it is said, will testify that as late as 11:30 o'clock on the night of the tragedy they heard the sound of piano playing, singing and laughter in the Fosburgh house. Besides the guest, Miss Sheldon, there were in the house Mr. and Mrs. Fosburgh, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stewart Fosburgh, Miss May Fosburgh and Miss Beatrice Fosburgh, the latter, 14 years old.

All members of the family slept on the second floor. Miss May Fosburgh and her sister Beatrice slept together. Miss Sheldon and Mr. and Mrs. Fosburgh, Sr., occupied respectively two front rooms separated by a hall. Mr. and Mrs. Fosburgh, Jr., occupied a room adjoining that of May and Beatrice, connected therewith by a door. Across the hall from the room occupied by May and Beatrice was a spare room. This room had been lately occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Fosburgh, Jr., and it was a number of Mr. Fosburgh's things, including clothing and a recently-purchased 32-caliber revolver, which was loaded and lying in a bureau drawer.

After the family had been in bed about an hour and a half, Mr. Fosburgh, Sr., says he was awakened by the flashing of a light through the door of his bedroom opening into the hall. He started to get out of bed when he was confronted by a masked man who held a pistol to his head. Mr. Fosburgh struck the pistol away, knocking it out of the burglar's hand to the floor. It rolled under the bed and afterward was found there—a 42-caliber bulldog revolver. Then between Mr. Fosburgh and the burglar there was a terrible struggle, during which one of Mr. Fosburgh's ribs was broken. Mr. Fosburgh also received a heavy blow on the head, presumably inflicted by a sand club in the hands of a confederate of the burglar with whom Mr. Fosburgh was eluded. Mrs. Fosburgh, Sr., by this time had come to her husband's assistance, and she, too, was beaten, receiving severe bruises.

The noise of the struggle awakened other members of the family. May Fosburgh went to the door opening into the hall. As she reached it and was about to step into the hall, a man standing on the threshold of the spare room opposite fired two pistol shots, one of which struck her in the heart, killing her instantly. Robert Stewart Fosburgh, the same who is now under indictment for killing her—who was rushing through her room to reach the scene of the struggle, caught her in his arms and laid her down. Then he, too, had a fierce struggle with one of the burglars, and was struck on the head by a confederate as his father had been. One burglar rushed down the back stairs and escaped by the door; two more of the gang got out of an upper window and via a veranda to the ground.

All this, of course, occurred with great rapidity, so great that when
